Few regions have seen travel bounce back from the pandemic in the way that Latin America and the Caribbean have. Despite this positive momentum for travel, regional profitability remains elusive, and performance varies substantially from market to market.

The agenda for Airline Leader Summit – Latin America will cover the most important issues shaping aviation in the region. These include: the outlook for airline restructuring and financing; mergers & consolidation along with market exits and new start-ups; financing and constraints of regional infrastructure; domestic and international tourism outlook; regional efforts towards aviation sustainability.

Content will draw from key aviation and travel leaders at both the local and international level, along well as CAPA's own perspectives and valuable independent market intelligence.

With previous events attended by hundreds of executives and other leaders from across the local and international travel and tourism sectors, the Airline Leader Summit – Latin America is a not to be missed regional aviation event.
